University of sharjah's newest student-lab magazine

issue #1 art, culture, and photography

Editor's Note

Welcome to the debut issue of UOS digest! After weeks of planning and hundreds of creative processes, we are so excited to present to you our first issue. This magazine is a collection of all things inspiring, from the world of photography to the beauty of Sharjah's culture, it's been a labor of love for our team, and we can't wait for you to dive in.

In this issue, we explore the beauty of the Sharjah Light Festival, a captivating celebration of light, culture and innovation that will leave you in awe. If photography is your passion, be sure to explore our feature of amazing photographers on campus, showcasing the creative brilliance of UOS students. We've also curated a set of games that will challenge you for exciting rewards, alongside simple, quick and dorm friendly recipes that will leave you craving more. And if art is where your heart lies, you'll enjoy our feature piece celebrating visual creativity and the artists who bring their visions to life.

As Editor-in-Chief, I'm thrilled to bring together such a diverse range of creative content in one space. This magazine is not just for our readers; it's a platform for small creatives to share what they create and to celebrate what makes our university so innovative. We hope this issue inspires you to think, create, and dream.

I want to take a moment to thank everyone who contributed to this issue—our talented writers, photographers, designers, and editors. Your passion and dedication made this publication possible, and I am so proud of what we've accomplished together.

Thank you for your support and for being part of our journey. I encourage you to share your thoughts with us so we can deliver more than ever. Let's continue to celebrate creativity and keep this conversation alive. We can't wait for what the next issue will bring.

With love & gratitude,

Sharjah light festival returns to illuminate the city

By: Batool Maher

15th February 2025

The Sharjah light festival has returned for its 14th year and takes place in 11 locations, including the Sharjah Research Technology and Innovation Park, Al Jada and Al Rafisah dam. It is being held from 5th February till the 16th of February with some locations extending it until the 23rd.

The light show which had its debut in 2010, is organized by the Sharjah Light Festival group and the Sharjah Commerce and Tourism Development Authority. It features local and international artists, musicians and light technicians participating to capture the tale of the Emirate through art.

Sharjah Research Technology and Innovation Park hosts an opening ceremony each night, from 6:00 pm to 11:00 pm. It takes the viewers on a journey on how His Highness Sheikh Sultan bin Muhammed Al Qasami transformed Sharjah into a center for culture and knowledge. The light show uses cutting edge-technology including, drones, lasers and captivating lights, telling a story of innovation, science and art.

Visitors are encouraged to check out “The light village” located next to the University City Hall, which is an area with food trucks, interactive lights, games and more, making it a great spot for the community to gather.

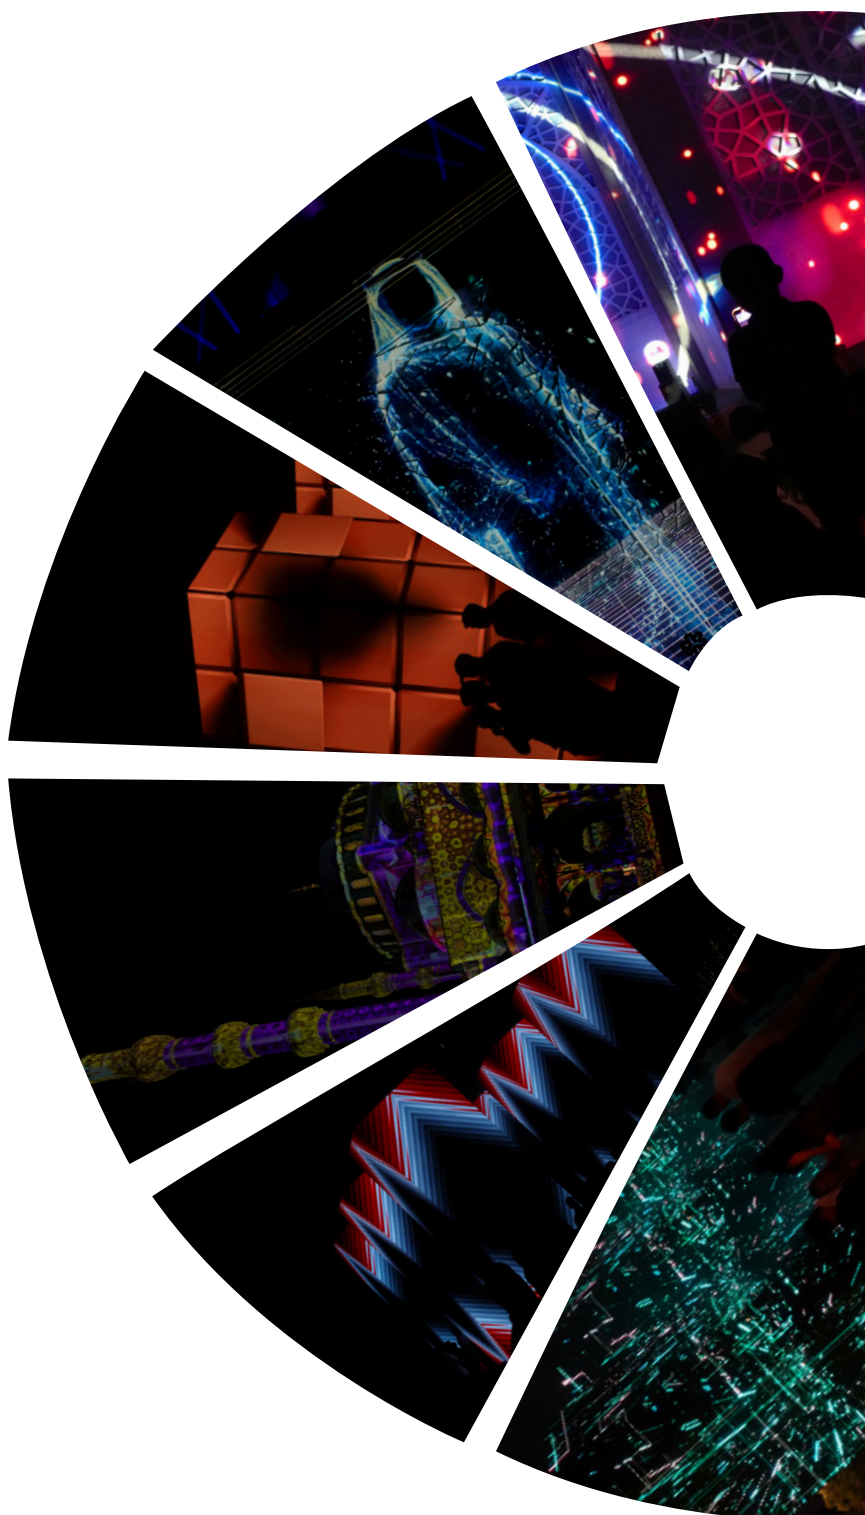

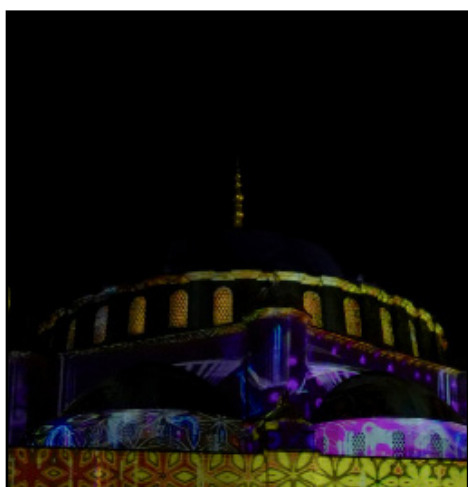

The show reflects on the core values of Sharjah which are unity, knowledge, creativity and harmony among humans. It aims to be a reminder to visitors and locals alike of where they stand and how important the UAE’s values are. It features graphics of people going to the mosque, DNA strands and planets, with the words “Sharjah one heart,” “Knowledge,” “Innovation,” and “Unity,” appearing, and ends with the famous quote “Smile you are in Sharjah.”

To many this might seem like a fun show, but if you read in between the lines, it tells the story of Sharjah and how its evolved, while staying in touch with the Emirati culture and heritage. Spectators get to discover a newfound appreciation for the Emirate’s landmarks and public spaces. Not to mention the achievements the Emirate has collected, like Islamic Culture Capital of 2014 (UNESCO) and most recently World book Capital of 2019 (UNESCO).

The lightshow proudly mentions how it has gotten more sustainable over the years as all the lights and projectors used have passed certification for environmental compliance while surrounding lights are switched off saving up to 60% of the power in area.

The whole experience is enlightening, and visitors have mentioned it makes them feel a connection with the city, reminding them of the incredible history and culture it is built on; the heritage is alive and this is just another example of this. The lightshows are a MUST visit as you can meet new people, eat incredible food and watch astonishing shows brought to you by talented artists.

XPOSURE

Xposure returns for another successful year

By Mira Fadi and Haaniyah Memon

22nd February 2025

The highly anticipated Xposure International Photography Festival returned this year from February 20 to 26 at Aljada, Sharjah. Bringing together over 400 talented photographers from 49 countries, the festival remains a global platform for creatives to express themselves through their photography. With a diverse range of exhibitions and nine art galleries, Xposure captures the essence of various themes ranging from culture, nature, history, and human emotion.

Attendees can participate in numerous interactive events, including 72 hands-on workshops, 50 inspiring panel discussions, and 58 film screenings. It is a golden opportunity for individuals to learn from professionals and major global photography brands. Continuously attracting visitors from across the UAE, the festival ranks among the top must-visit destinations for photography enthusiasts. The festival features 98 exhibitions, displaying over 3,100 images. Each one instills different emotions in viewers. Although they tell unique stories exploring different themes, coexisting under the same roof creates a powerful sense of unity that brings together diverse perspectives through the shared language of photography.

Among the many exhibitions is the powerful “La Vie En Rose” by Véronique de Viguerie. This collection displays photographs from war zones in which she managed to capture such conflicting moments through a rose-colored lens, highlighting both the struggle endured by her subjects and the beauty that still exists amidst the chaos.

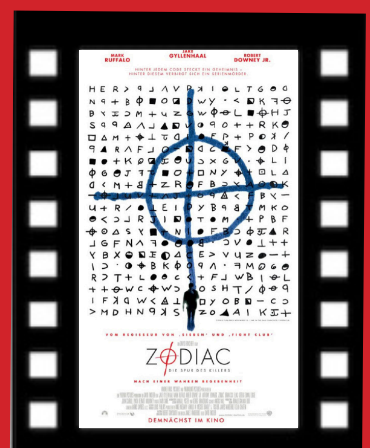

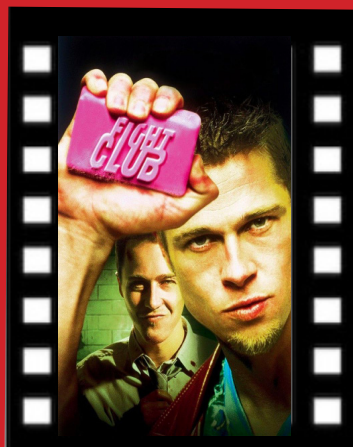

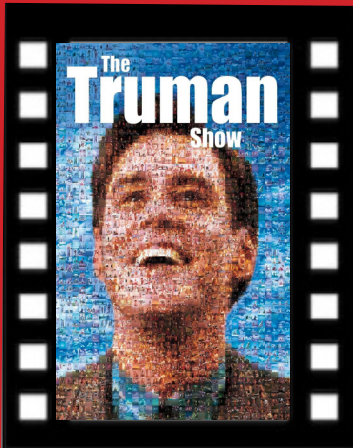

One image grabbed the attention of visitors and resonated with them. “This picture speaks a thousand words; I didn’t even need to read the description for it to touch my heart,” said an attendee. The photograph, taken in Jalalabad, Afghanistan, portrays a girl cradling her newborn child after fleeing a life of hardship. “The collection is heartbreakingly beautiful.”

“Rainforest: A world of wonder,” an exhibition by Dieter & Sandra Hanke that takes viewers on a captivating journey through the world’s rainforests. From the intricate details of reptiles and insects that inhabit these forests to the trees and their canopies that tower over the threatened ecosystems, the exhibition inspires viewers to recognize the beauty and importance of preserving the world’s rainforests. The Primeval Forest Millions of Years Ago photograph stood out to an attendee, “I love it, I can feel the trees breathing in.”

Upon entering Al Jada, you can feel the essence of the photography and artistic ambience they have set. Each gallery has an atmosphere of its own, yet everything is tied so beautifully together. Whether you are interested in photography centered around themes of sorrow or moved by stories of hope, Xposure has the gallery for you.

“It’s a feeling no other place can give you,” Maryam, a visitor mentions how immense the feeling of inspiration is, the variety of stories in one place “is overwhelming, but in a good way.” Xposure manages to create an environment where you feel lifted but down to earth at the same time, it raises awareness of issues that have been silenced while appreciating the art of photography and film.

Reeling into the job market

By Haaniyah Memon
21st February 2025

The transition from being a student to having to thrive in the job market is a difficult one, from not knowing what you want to specialize in, to modifying your CV daily. Jawdat Alalami, a communications graduate from 2024, tells us how he navigates the world of fresh graduates in the thriving industry of communications and media.

Jawdat emphasizes how important it is to focus on hands-on experiences in university and not take advantage of them, "The program allowed us to focus on experiences, such as internships and collaborative projects which prepared me best." He stresses the importance of preparing for the job market beforehand, having a competitive advantage before you graduate and keeping yourself updated with the dynamics of the industry. "Start building your network early, and don't wait until graduation to begin looking for internships or freelance work," he mentions.

Jawdat says the main thing he regrets is not figuring out what he wanted to go into before he graduated; experimenting with free elective courses, college clubs, and talking to different professors is a great idea for those who aren't sure what they want to specialize in, "Understanding what you want to get into before you enter the job market gives you a headstart on what jobs to apply for."

The influence of certain professors and courses played a significant role in shaping Jawdat's perspective, particularly in understanding the ethical responsibilities that come with a career in communications. He thanked Dr. Ogadimma and Dr. Wafa for helping him in his communications career.

Don't be afraid to take risks and step outside of your comfort zone. "The change from college to the workforce can be intimidating, but it's also an exciting time to explore new opportunities." He advises, "Stay persistent, keep learning, and remember that every challenge is a chance to grow."

The jump from student to graduate can be a big one, but it's a journey that can open the gate for new opportunities. Embrace the unknown, and trust that each step forward, no matter how uncertain, will lead you closer to your personal and professional growth.

From Canvas to Craft: The University's Art Event Highlights Student Talent and Entrepreneurship

By Sherlyn Mathew
20th February 2025

The university transformed itself into a masterpiece of color and expression as it hosted its most anticipated art event of the spring semester from the 17th to the 20th of February, accompanied by an art bazaar. This event served as a hub for students from all majors, offering them a platform to showcase their creativity through the Best Picture Competition or as vendors promoting their businesses.

The event took place in two key locations on the women's campus: the Glass Corridors and the Deanship of Student Affairs. The lobby of the Deanship of Student Affairs turned into an art gallery, displaying a striking collection of paintings and photographs.

Meanwhile, the Glass Corridor became an immersive artistic space. One side was dedicated to live painting, where students turned blank canvases into intricate works on the spot for cash prizes. On the opposite side, the entrepreneurs took to the walls to create a line of vibrant stalls with an array of handmade products, from crochet creations and scented candles to custom-designed stickers and accessories.

The university played a crucial role in making the event more than just an exhibition by allowing creativity to flow. Through a delicate brushstroke, a carefully placed bead, or a meticulously woven thread, students demonstrated that art is more than just a visual experience; it is a form of storytelling, emotion, and innovation. UoS continues to champion its creative community, inspiring students to push boundaries and share their artistic journeys.

THE WORLD THROUGH THE EYES OF SONDER

By Haaniyah Memon
17th February 2025

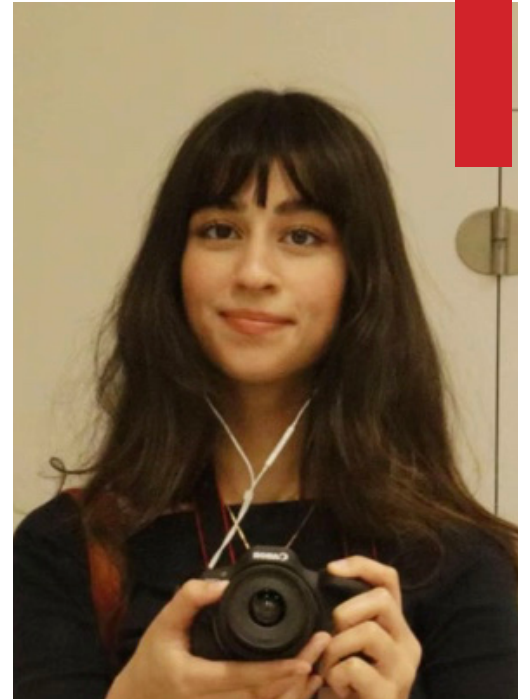

Afra Adel Askani, a Persian Emirati nursing student is a passionate and aspiring photographer who wishes to share her thoughts and emotions with people and make them feel nostalgic and tied to nature.

She connects photography to her home in Iran; a country full of art and culture, she gets her inspiration from Shiraz "The city of gardens and poems."

The nineteen-year-olds love for photography stems from the idea that even though she can see the beauty of something and capture it, the stories that she attaches to it are her own views and may be different to those of others. Referencing her 4th picture, she ponders about a story to connect to it, "they're two birds that are in love, and they chose to be together during this moment in time." Afra doesn't follow a strict technique when it comes to her pictures, a lot of her work is centered around the theme of "sonder" (the realization that each person is living a life as vivid and complex as your own.") Afra aims to capture what she is experiencing in that instant, "I want them [viewers] to be able to feel exactly what I'm feeling in that moment." Taking pictures of places and things that make her ponder and posting them for people to admire is what contents her, a simple photo of the front of a light-shop makes Afra feel nostalgic, at home and seen, and she wants to share this with her world, her "oyster."

Referencing her 2nd picture she says, "Everything about her stunned me." Afra sees beauty in the simplest things, this is what makes her photos of ordinary objects and people so inspiring. The way she captures her subject attaches a deep meaning to it.

"Be present & be genuine" is the advice Afra gives to others seeking photography, she finds excitement and inspiration in the small things "that go unnoticed but are always a part of us and our day-to-day lives"

For many, photography is a way of self-expression, but for Zein Hammoud, a nineteen-year-old medical lab sciences student, photography is a way to understand the stories of life. His passion for the art started early in life, when he was just 11. Through his lens, Zein peels back the layers of the ordinary and shows his viewers the impact of the seemingly mundane.

His photography journey started when he was in the 6th grade; despite being too young to join the photography club, his passion for the art drove him to prove his worth, helping him win a spot. Zein sees this as the day he “truly became committed to photography.”

His passion, determination and Lebanese identity are clearly diffused within his work, every picture is different yet manages to convey the same profound feelings, Zein doesn't take pictures of a specific genre, if he's able to “capture what the subject is feeling,” he is pleased with his work.

In 2022 he came to the realization that beauty is in the moments and not the objects of life, this changed the way he took his pictures and viewed the world. Moving from capturing the mainstream, ideal view of beauty, to falling in love with the idea of preserving a moment, “my work shifted from capturing the beauty of a frame to stopping a moment in time.”

CAPTURING THE LAYERS OF HISTORY

Zein's photography digs deep into how subjects can be equated to something much simpler in life. Referencing his 2nd picture he says “it's similar to the never-ending loop of an infinity mirror,” comparing the shot of the Roman hippodrome in Soor to mirrors reflecting onto one another.

Describing his picture of the busy streets of Bangkok (Thailand), Zein mentions “it captures a transition of old to new,” he notices the layers of the vibrant city, where contemporary meets culture. He hopes that people can feel the history and the story of the scene he chooses to photograph, “you don't realize how many people's lives have changed over time in that place you capture.”

“Everyone starts somewhere, as long as you have the passion for it, your pictures will come out exactly how you want them to.” Zein emphasizes that photography isn't just about skill and “the type of camera you're using.”

Campus Couture: The First Look

By Intesar & Yassmin Mohammed Khalil

It has come to our attention that the exam schedules have been sent out, leaving an atmosphere of stress in their wake—felt by all. Not to worry though, as this “first look” into campus couture will deviate your attention to something much more easygoing. In this first edition, we will be exploring the hottest trends on campus, featuring students debating if tiny bags are loved by all, and discussing the unofficial campus accessories—coffee & cold drinks. So, if we have piqued your interest and you wish to clear your mind on all things exams, then continue to reading on the latest trends.

Trend Report: The Season of Comebacks

One cannot make their way through the crowded corridors without spotting Adidas Sambas adorning the feet of the general public. The once underrated sneaker; gatekept by skaters and indie kids has taken society by storm, leaving no one untouched, thanks to fashion influencers and high-fashion collaborations. nevertheless, all credit cannot simply be given to them. The versatility of the Sambas has also helped it establish its place in the campus dress code. These seemingly new “go-to sneakers” have actually been around for a while, making their first appearance in the 1950s as indoor soccer shoes. By consistently reappearing throughout decades of streetwear, Sambas have become a cultural phenomenon. The ability of these retro sneakers to be seamlessly integrated into outfits from baggy jeans to abayas has captured the hearts of university students.

Sambas are not the only ones capturing hearts, if one has stepped foot on campus recently, it’s hard to miss the takeover of the Polène or JW Pei bag. Polène’s sculpted, elegant designs and JW Pei’s modern minimalism dominate the campus. These bags are the ultimate “gift that keeps on giving” since they offer practicality too. By perfectly blending fashion with function, they have become the “It” bags on campus. When looking closer at the Polène bags, one can notice the subtle echoes of the early 2000s perfectly reinterpreted with a modern twist of sleek and minimalistic design, contrary to the flashy logos of that time. Although the Polène bags focus on perfecting their designs, JW Pei goes the extra mile of using eco-friendly materials to create their unique and contemporary silhouettes, proving that the fashionably elite should not be choosing between sustainability and style.

Another trend gracing us with its presence from the early 2000s is cheetah print. But before you look away in disgust, allow us to reassure you: this time it’s more refined and not the loud statement it once was. In fashion history, it is impossible to miss the legacy of cheetah print. Initially worn by royalty, the cheetah print symbolized power and luxury. Later on, designers from the 60s and 70s introduced the bold print to their designs making it the newest trend. However, it was in the early 2000s when it hit its peak. Once again, cheetah print has taken the spotlight—but this time it’s all about adding it as a small touch from handbags to phone cases. No more full-cheetah looks, it’s more about styling the pattern without overpowering the outfit.

Campus Fit Check

It would be silly of us to consider fashion as something superficial, the art of dressing runs much deeper. Some more than others have mastered this, and so, we introduce to you those who have captured our attention with their styles.

Aisha – Mass Communication Student

“Versatile, bold, and adventurous,” are three words Aisha uses to describe her style. Although she does dress up sometimes, emphasises comfortable over style and says, “I enjoy coming to uni in just plain clothes and being super comfy.” When it comes to her go-to campus outfit; black pants, a black shirt, any abaya, and Oran sandals are her usual options. For Aisha, dressing based on her mood is more of her style than planning. “Most of the time it just depends on my mood,” she says. She picks rings as her must-have accessory, and explains, “They make everything look super put-together.” Her fashion advice? “Dress however you want...and don’t think about what others might think of you,” she explains that some people may like your style, some may not, so just wear what you love. “Fashion is a huge part of many people’s lives, it’s how they express themselves.”

Sally – Mass Communication Student

Sally describes her style as “old money, casual and classy,” and switches between them depending on the occasion. When it comes to balancing style and comfort she says “Beauty is pain, I’d rather be uncomfortable with a nice outfit than be comfortable in something I don’t like.” For her go-to outfit, she usually opts for is something simple like “jeans and a top.” For Sally, planning her outfits the night before is a must, otherwise she’d lose track of time trying to choose something in the morning and end up late for class. Bags and watches are must accessories, they will always complete her look. Her fashion advice? “Go out of your comfort zone and experiment with different styles, I was stuck on the same style for 3 years till I discovered one that suits me the best and I’m the most confident in myself now.”

Maria – Mass Communication Student

For Maria “casual, chic, and comfortable” are three words that are synonymous with her style. She balances style with comfort and says, “I like to find pieces that are both stylish and functional.” Her usual go-to outfit consists of a comfy t-shirt with jeans or a set. “I think sets are life savers,” she adds. When it comes to planning her outfits, Maria prefers to think in advance, more so on days when her schedule is packed. She considers statement earrings a must-have accessory, as she uses them to add a finishing touch to any outfit. A simple piece of fashion advice she has is, “Dress for yourself and not anyone else.”

Trend Court: The Tiny Bag Trial

In the first session of Trend Court, we have the case: Tiny Bags; Are they a fashion statement or function failure.

Intesar: As a Tiny Bag lover, I can’t help but represent the defendant in this case. I would like to argue that Tiny Bags are a staple when it comes to making a fashion statement since they offer aesthetic value.

Yassmin: I mean, I do see your point there but the evidence against the defense is quite strong. Based on a campus-wide survey, the results seem to lean towards Big Bags. Their argument? Practicality. Most students argue that they are willing to put practicality over aesthetics.

Intesar: Seriously? That’s interesting! based on the number of Tiny Bags we see on campus, I thought they would win this case, no questions asked!

Yassmin: The votes seemed pretty close at first, but in the end big bags take the win with a slight margin.

Intesar: So! there you have it, the final verdict: While Tiny Bags win when it comes to making a fashion statement, the jury seems to value functionality more in this case.

Yassmin: Tiny bags might not hold much, but they do hold a special place in our hearts.

Coffee & Cold Drinks – The Unofficial Campus Accessory

The current “It” items on campus may be Sambas, Polène bags, and cheetah print but the ultimate accessories, no matter the season, are cold drinks and coffee! From a matcha latte to an iced coffee, bubble tea, or even just a simple espresso, these aesthetic drinks are a staple among students. They seem to have elevated their status from being just a caffeine fix to becoming part of the outfit. With a café being opened on every corner across campus, getting a drink has become a routine for many. While some prefer a minimalist look with their reusable tumblers, others are followers of the seasonal specials and might even coordinate their drinks to their outfits. These beverages are fashion statements and they act as a reflection of one’s style.

Want to be featured?

As our journey ends, we have already started wondering what trends, debates, or styles will capture our attention in the next edition. So, we raise the question to you, if you have noticed trends that simply cannot be missed or believe no one can out-dress you, then do not hesitate to reach out. Who knows? Your ideas might end up intriguing our readers! Until then, keep your eyes sharp and your wardrobe sharper, because we definitely will be on the lookout.

BEAT THE HEAT : 2025

BY REEM SIRALKATIM & NOOR NADER
17 FEBRUARY

“Beat the Heat 2025 brings together students from Medicine, Pharmacy, Dentistry, Health Sciences, and Nursing to unwind through sports, socializing, and take a break from academic pressure,” said Dr. Zeina alsharif, Head of the Student Activities Department at the College of Medicine. This annual event featured competitions in basketball, volleyball, baby foot, and bench press, alongside entertainment like a Photo Booth, restaurants, and student-run businesses. Aimed at promoting focus, teamwork, and well-being, Beat the Heat 2025 was once again a key highlight of the academic year, reaffirming the university’s dedication to student engagement outside the classroom.

Visitors at Beat the Heat 2025 shared their excitement about the event’s diverse offerings. Mohammed, one of the attendees, highlighted the impressive variety of food options available. “I tried Buffalo Wild Wings, and it was a great experience. There are so many food choices here, and everything looks amazing,” he said.

Maen, another visitor, enjoyed a taste of tradition. “I had food from Kalha, a Jordanian restaurant, and it was really good. I’d definitely recommend it,” he shared.

When asked about the must-try attraction for first-time visitors, both agreed that the Meltdown game was a standout. “The first thing that caught my eye was Meltdown. It’s so much fun, and it really gets you moving,” said Mohammed.

Maen added, “It’s a game that brings out your inner child—you just jump around and enjoy it.”

With thrilling activities, delicious food, and a lively atmosphere, Beat the Heat 2025 once again proved to be an unforgettable experience for all who attended.

JABIR ABDALLAH
COLLEGE OF COMPUTER SCIENCE

Shared his excitement after winning Beat the Heat 2025. “It feels incredible! The competition was tough, but all the hard work paid off,” he said. On his preparation, Jaber emphasized focusing on strength, endurance, and maintaining a positive mindset. The toughest challenge, he revealed, was pushing through fatigue. “The hardest part was staying focused when I started feeling tired, but I kept going and finished strong,” he explained, showcasing the resilience that led him to victory.

Shahad Moatez, president of the Medical Students Association, expressed pride in hosting the Beat the Heat 2025 event, now in its 6th or 7th year. “We’re thrilled to welcome all colleges with sports like volleyball, basketball, football, and more. We aim to be more inclusive each year, welcoming everyone, including faculty,” she said. Her leadership continues to make Beat the Heat an exciting, inclusive tradition uniting students across disciplines.

Challenging “Deeper Meaning” in Art

By Muniba Saeed

What if art didn't have to mean something? What if it was simply about capturing a moment in life, eternalizing the emotions of that moment? Shamaylah's paintings do just that, and more. With every brushstroke, she breathes life into moments we forget too easily – color transforms into the joy that lingers after a night out with friends, or the warmth of togetherness over a breakfast with family.

For as long as Shamaylah could remember, art has been an inseparable part of her life. “My mother used to be a painter herself, and has always been my biggest supporter,” she shares.

What started as simple still-life paintings soon evolved into something more personal. “I began painting moments from my life—things a camera could never translate into emotion,” she explains. “I'm a fairly nostalgic person when it comes to these things, so I try to immortalize those moments through my paintings.”

Her favorite piece, a painting of samosas and chai, beautifully embodies this feeling. “Something about the colors, the comfort food, and the cultural significance really resonated with me,” she says.

While Shamaylah's paintings are often emotionally rich, she challenges the idea that every piece must carry a “deeper meaning.” “To be completely honest, most of my art doesn't have any hidden or symbolic meaning, and that's okay. Art doesn't always have to mean something. Sometimes it's just about capturing a moment I really liked.”

However, that hasn't stopped others from trying to interpret possible meanings behind her work. She recalls an amusing experience from her second year, when a professor analyzed her heart-shaped lollipop painting as a critique of capitalism and over-consumption. “Who needs that many lollipops, Shamaylah?” he had asked. She laughed saying, “What if I just want to share some with my friends?” The professor insisted, “Well, what if you didn't have any friends?”—a question she remembers as difficult to not take personally.

Through her work, she reveals the simplicity of creating art—not for any grand interpretations, but simply for the joy of color and memory. Her paintings are a testament to the idea that sometimes, art is just about capturing the moment, and that's more than enough.

Shamaylah's art redefines the idea that every piece must carry a symbolic meaning. Rather than traditional symbolism or the “hidden meanings” we often search for, the meaning in her art is found in the way she captures the emotions of the moment. The “deeper meaning” might not be in the shapes and objects she paints, but in the feelings those moments evoke—the deeply personal sentiments that connect every person to the work. In doing so, she reminds us that sometimes, art is meaningful simply because it was a moment once lived.

Master Of One

By Reem Dhakir

“the jack of all trades is a master of none but oftentimes better than a master of one” or at least that’s how this famous saying goes the jack of all trades seamlessly flows from task to task by living with a mind where rather the progress and resilience outweigh the focus on details

while the jack of all trades receives applause for their ability to have it all together, the master of one brews a cup full of envy and rumination

the thoughts “what do they have that i don’t?” “how come my talent and efforts aren’t truly seen?” roam the master of one’s mind the jack of all trades grew up with the freedom to enter territories that the master of one never had or dared to go to out of a fear of an untimely demise

the master of one spends their time analyzing the intricacies of each task, utilizing their introspective nature to ensure that everything is perfect

when this nature shines through, the spotlight shines brightly on them and gives them the accolades they thrive off but their obsession with perfection has brewed up a poisonous mixture of feelings of inadequacy and fears of rejection and failure

while these thoughts corrupt the master of one’s mind, the jack of all trades ascends to the higher altitudes of their goals

what the master of one didn’t realize until seeing the jack of all trades is that taking a leap of faith is sometimes necessary in order to reach the finish line

the master of one also learned that progress and resilience often triumphs perfection as it’s nothing but an intangible myth that doesn’t exist beyond our imagination

the jack of all trades also recognized the need to pick up the traits from the master of one’s observant mind and now the two collaborate at helping each other grow out of their weaknesses

There are 2 famous movie quotes hidden within the magazine. Use the coordinates given below to track down each word and rearrange the words to make the sentence.

How to play:

Each 8-digit code represents a word's location in the magazine using this format:

1. Find the word by matching the coordinate to the page, article, line, and word number.
2. Write down the words in order.
3. Once you've found them all, assemble them into a complete movie quote
4. The first two to crack both quotes and DM us on instagram @uosdigest wins coupons for Bawwabah!
